

Becoming a Christ-like Servant

The greatest personal challenge a Christian will face is to become a Christ-like servant. It is the low road to a believer's high calling. It is a challenge because it goes against our natural desire for popularity, power, and prominence. Not surprisingly, Jesus was the perfect example of a servant when He lived on the earth. A believer, by staying fixed on Jesus (Hebrews 12:1-2), can follow in His steps.

In the Old Testament, Jesus is described as a "servant" (Isaiah 42:1). The New Testament describes Him similarly (Acts 3:26, Philippians 2:5-8). As the Perfect Servant, Jesus taught His disciples that the pathway for greatness in God's kingdom was found by traveling the low road of a servant (Matthew 23:11). Jesus demonstrated the consistency of a true servant's heart by washing His disciples' feet just a few hours before He was crucified (John 13:3-5).

Believers are to become more and more like the Perfect Servant (2 Corinthians 3:18, Ephesians 4:15). In so doing, they will demonstrate love to others (Matthew 7:12) and not merely live to please themselves (2 Corinthians 5:15).

The example (Jesus) and the teaching (Scripture) clearly and perfectly present the characteristics of a Christ-like servant. The difficulty in becoming a servant is described by three words – dying to self – which presents a clear-cut choice for every believer (Luke 9:23-24; Romans 12:2).

Dying to self, however, cannot be accomplished by one's own power or insight. If dying to self depended solely on personal abilities, no one would become more like Christ, since natural wisdom and strength are woefully inadequate to accomplish that transformation. Thank God, through His mercy and abundant grace, He has provided divinely powerful and completely sufficient resources (Jesus, Holy Spirit, and Scripture) to enable a believer to mature spiritually. The issue is not God's supply, which is more than ample for a believer to mature spiritually. The issue is a believer's willingness to rely on God's plan and power to become a fruitful servant of Christ by leaving old patterns of life in order to be conformed to the image of Christ.

Dying to self, in spite of its importance for a believer to become a Christ-like servant, is not the primary focus of each day. A believer is to focus on Christ, the perfect servant. By maintaining this focus, a Christian realizes that Christ-centered servanthood comes from the inside out, accomplished by cooperating with God as He develops the character of Jesus within a follower of Christ. As that inward development progresses, a believer will respond more and more in a Christ-like manner to life's situations and, especially, in personal relationships.

Life's greatest challenge, being a Christ-like servant, can become life's greatest reward for a wholehearted disciple of Jesus.
